More People Who Changed the World

Have you ever stood in a lift and wondered if it can crash to the ground? There's no need to worry! In 1854, the American engineer Elisha Graves Otis invented a safety brake (5) so no one believed it. Three years later he designed the first passenger lifts in the United States. Thanks to Otis, people no longer had to climb hundreds of stairs (6) about our universe and so buildings could be much taller. Thanks to Otis we have skyscrapers today!

The telescope was invented in Holland in 1608. The Italian astronomer Galileo Galilei heard about this new invention in 1609 and soon he built his own telescope. He used it to prove his theory (7) to reach higher floors. He also used it to make important discoveries about the Moon, the planets and the stars. Thanks to Galileo, we now know much more (8)

that the Earth orbited the Sun

In 1925 the American inventor Clarence Birdseye created the world's first quick-frozen food. He was able to develop a freezing process which kept food fresh and tasty. He then invented a fast-freezing machine (9) about 100 years ago. As a result of his work, there is now a lot of different kinds of frozen food which you can buy

(10) which later became a commercial freezer.

Our world of modern global communications began on 4 October, 1957, when the Soviet Union sent Sputnik 1 into space – it was the first (11) artificial satellite. It was invented by aircraft engineer and rocket designer Sergei Pavlovich Korolyov, but because of the Cold War, people all around the world didn't know about his success until (12) the 1960s. Also thanks to Korolyov, Yuri Gagarin made the first manned space flight in 1961.

Part 3 Use of English

Task 1

For questions (1-20) choose the correct verb form for each gap. (0) – is done for you as an example.

He Didn't Laugh

Mark Twain, the famous American author, (0) was well known (to know) as a lecturer, and literary clubs often (1) invited (to invite) him to speak. Before one of his lectures a club member (2) comes (to come) up to him and said, "Mr. Twain, people (3) will say (to say) that you can tell very funny stories. I hope that during your lecture you (4) make (to make) my uncle (5) laugh (to laugh). He (6) doesn't laugh (not to laugh) for ten years." "I'll do my (12) best", Mark Twain said.

At the beginning of his lecture, Mark Twain (7) noticed (to notice) the club member who (8) was sitting (to sit) in front of him with an old sad man. Mark Twain (9) began to tell (to begin) (to tell) jokes, one after another, long jokes and short jokes, new jokes and old jokes. Soon everybody (10) will cry (to cry) with laughter. Everybody – but not the old man. He (11) would look (to look) at Mark Twain with his cold blue eyes. Mark Twain (12) is ashamed (to be ashamed). After the lecture, the club member (13) thanked (to thank) Mark Twain because he (14) had never heard (never to hear) so many funny stories.

"They (15) were not (not to be) funny enough for your uncle. He (16) hadn't even (not even smile)!" Mark Twain (17) answered (to answer).

"I'd like to thank you and say again my uncle (18) hasn't laughed (not to laugh) for ten years. I want you to know he (19) didn't hear (not to hear) anything for ten years. He (20) is deaf (to be deaf)."
